2017 Pensions Collection Act: the most important changes

At the end of December 2017, the 2017 Pensions Collection Act was published. Among other requirements, collection legislation must not include major, complex parts or politically controversial changes. However, this act does include new provisions that are relevant for the pension sector, including the obligation for large company pension funds to establish a supervisory board. The act also makes it easier for a general pension fund to execute a pension scheme that has been closed. In this article, we highlight the most important changes.
